Vietnam Archive; Pentagon Study Traces 3 Decades of Growing U. S. Involvement

BY THE STAFF
 A study made up of the United States Army, Navy and Air Force has disclosed that the Pentagon has accumulated a vast archive of records covering the military's involvement in Vietnam from World War II to the present. The study, which is being released to the public, traces the growth of the United States' military presence in Vietnam from its beginnings as a military advisory mission in 1950 to its escalation into a full-scale war in 1965. The study also details the military's operations in Vietnam, including the number of troops, the types of weapons used, and the results of military operations. The study is the result of a 10-month project by the Pentagon's historical office, which was authorized by the Defense Department in 1969. The study is being released to the public in a 30-volume set, which will be available to the general public in the next few weeks. The study is a landmark document in the history of the Vietnam War, as it provides a comprehensive and detailed account of the military's involvement in the conflict. The study is also a valuable resource for historians and scholars who are interested in the Vietnam War. The study is being released to the public at a time when the Vietnam War is still a highly controversial issue, and it is expected that the study will spark a renewed debate about the war and the role of the military in Vietnam.

Question

Max Planck solved the “ultraviolet catastrophe” by positing that electromagnetic radiation only came in discrete packets that we now know by what name?

Answer
Photons

The Ultraviolet catastrophe

- The Rayleigh-Jeans law predicted a continued increase of radiated energy with increasing frequency and an ‘ultraviolet catastrophe’
- Max Planck solved this (in 1901) by assuming that the EM modes in a cavity were quantized with energy (E) equal to $h\nu$ (h = Planck’s constant)
