Question

On December 17, 1877, Twain attended a Boston dinner in honor of the poet John Greenleaf Whittier. In attendance, among other notables, were Emerson, Holmes and Longfellow. Twain did something that night that he regretted for the rest of his life. What did he do?

Answer

He made a speech in which he “roasted” Emerson, Holmes and Longfellow. The speech was universally criticized and Twain felt compelled to write an abject apology to the three men.

Even Mark Twain
bombed sometimes.
